

solite disenfranchisement of their rights." She blamed him for inflaming the protesters by responding to them. She was "deeply, deeply uncomfortable" because the Federalist Society's event was "tearing at the fabric of this community." Continuing with her self-absorbed inventory of her feelings, and fluent in DEI-speak, she told of her labors creating "a space of belonging" and "places of safety." She said, with Duncan standing nearby, that even "abhorrent" speech that "literally denies the humanity of people" should not be censored "because me and many peo-

are demanding that the dean apologize for apologizing.

Stanford has not expelled any of the imperfectly "aligned" disrupters. The school might be improved by the departure of the student whose idea of intellect in the service of social justice was to shout sexual boastings and scabrous insults. Readers can find in the Washington Free Beacon the insulter's unintended proof that there is indecent exposure of the mind as well as the body.

Parents deserve a say in their Child's Education

By: State Rep Claudia Tenney

Our children have faced unprecedented challenges these last two years. First, they were locked out of schools and denied basic educational opportunities. Then they were allowed to go to school, but forced to mask up. The dire impacts of learning loss on students has set many of them back years, a deficit some may never be able to fully make up.

Now, although our children are back in the classroom, America's students and parents are facing down yet another crisis: liberals pushing a dangerous, woke agenda in our schools.

We have all heard stories of libraries full of graphic pornographic books. We have seen the videos of teachers preaching a woke gender ideology to very young children in classrooms. We have watched as divisive rhetoric based on Critical Race Theory is injected into curriculums.

As a mother and a compassionate conservative who will always fight for our shared family values, I believe enough is enough. I strongly support the "Parents Bill of Rights" in Congress, which is a critical part of the Republican Commitment to America. This legislation affirms five core principles: Parents have the right to review their school's curriculum, to lawfully engage with their local school board, to see their school's budget, to protect their child's privacy, and to keep their child safe.

For generations, these principles were at the heart of the compact between parents, students, and our public education system. Yet as they come under attack today from far-left activists who seek to use our schools for woke indoctrination, the time to reaffirm these key principles is now.

The Parents Bill of Rights will increase transparency in our school districts, restore trust between educators and our communities, and protect children from sexually graphic or violent content.
